Studies into the long term effects of micro plastics on health are still ongoing, however, there is clear evidence that micro plastics have breached all natural immune barriers in the body, including the blood brain membrane. It is known that this causes considerable damage to natural hormone function in the human body, which studies have linked to declining health and auto-immune disease, particularly in children.

If the negative impact on human populations isn't enough, there is also our wildlife, waterways, farmland (food supply) and environmental micro-biome. At present, the Southern Highlands is a respected site by those who inhabit it's lands; everyone I know personally treats the area with respect and doesn't seek to damage to very ground we live on.

I am strongly opposed to any such facility and hope future proposals of the like receive better scrutiny by those we pay to do so.
