During the meeting with the representatives from the plasrefine company, they couldn't even provide the public a reliable research result on the environmental impact of the plasrefine facility. It seems like a decision that is rushed in somehow and shouldn't progress until there is a clarity around the environmental and social impact of the facility. I barely met any local people who completely object the plant as whole. This objection is not NIMBY but a request to decision makers to reconsider the location. It can be in the Southern Highland but find another spot that makes sense more.
