I object to the plan for the plasrefine facility entirely. There is still proof of the effect of microplastics that escape the best filtration systems in these facilities that enter the waters that will directly affect all localised agriculture and farm animals as well as the community inhabitants. This is not the site and not the answer to dealing with plastic waste. See reports for similar facilities in Scotland that have failed measures of success with filtration and the outlying effects of this process. We are trying to hang on to the blessed balance of growing communities and population amongst agriculture and space all within perfect measured distances to Sydney and the Nations Capital. We need to not over develop and definitely not use any site in this region for a poisoned ill informed purpose. We need further studies on how to effectively deal with plastics. This is not the answer. Yes, increased traffic is also a concern but the primary concern is the process and the outcomes it produces.
