My initial concern after hearing about this project in the media was.

Why is the NSW govt allowing a [REDACTED] company to operate this business? Are they saying that not one Australian company was willing or capable of building & running such a facility?

After doing a little research I found that the Director of Plasrefine has come under [REDACTED].

Does Plasrefine have the funds to build & successfully run the plant & are they fully aware of the high costs of doing business in Australia?

I read part of their original submission that I found on their web site. The web site has very little information on it & is simply no more than a very basic production. There is nothing on it to show their experience in this type of business & there is no detail of the directors or management teams.

Their very 1st submission is written in a way that the translation from [REDACTED] & uses American spelling like organize & words like Tote, this word has been used in the bathroom industry for toilet. I have seen enough poorly translated & written product instructions & warranty forms in my working life to know that the sillier that they read the shonkier the company.

So, there are, for me, a number of red flags from just reading & watching the interviews on TV.

Sure, build a plant to do this work but select the right site with the right road networks by the right company. Stop letting the Free Trade Agreements that government seem to think that they need to have in place ruin it. Australia is not Australia anymore!
