As a teenager, who's grown up as a dairy farmers daughter and in this area my whole life, change is inevitable but the whole appeal and benefit of the southern highlands is that it is an escape from the city. It is a place where we connect the people and community with the land and through this atrocious site, our township, land and community will be affected and deprived of all that we love. Everyone will be affected, it's the farmers, the businesses, the neighbouring properties, the community, jobs, evrything. Coming from a dairy farming family, life on the land is incredible and can be very rewarding, coming with its negatives too. However what we have to lean on is the knowledge of the community, the area where the land will give back and the business. Everything is wrong about it. This site will not just change a couple of peoples lives, our whole area will be affected and this once lovely, charming town becomes something you can barely see with all the air pollution. I think to just decide on the plant location without consulting people who will be affected and those who are working for a living, paying their day and not sitting on a high horse will benefit more than the people who have no clue on what goes on. And who have some sort of self arrogance to believe that this is the best thing to happen. I think that this site needs to be moved and has to have improvements and ways that everyone and everything will not be affected. Thank you for letting everyone have a voice!
